

Grant Opportunities & News You Can Use

Hello, faculty,

Welcome to the end of the semester! I hope you’re doing well and had some time to relax over the last few days.

This month we are back with a Featured Funder column on The Ford Foundation. For our Sage Advice column, we have advice on “Hidden Costs When Writing Your First Budget.” This one is for all of you staring down an empty spreadsheet for the first time and wondering what on earth goes in a grant budget.

After Sage Advice, we have a few news stories, including an updated policy on data sharing from the NIH.

As per usual, we have brief profiles of upcoming opportunities, including an NEH grant due March 1, 2021 for “The Institutes for Advanced Topics in the Digital Humanities program,” which “supports national or regional (multistate) training programs for scholars, humanities professionals, and advanced graduate students to broaden and extend their knowledge of digital humanities.” We also have a calendar of opportunities coming due in the next six months.

The next Internal Grant deadline is January 26, for Barnard Faculty Research Grants and Tow Award for Innovative and Outstanding Pedagogy Proposals .

As always, if you need assistance finding grants or beginning an application, please feel free to email any of the members of the Institutional Funding and Sponsored Research team. We love to hear from you!

The Ford Foundation

“I think the Foundation’s been a fiasco from my point of view from day one,” Henry Ford II, the grandson of Henry Ford, groused in a 1973 interview looking back at the history of the Ford Foundation. “And it got out of control and it got in the control of a lot of liberals. . . . I’ve tried to break up the Foundation several times and have been unsuccessful. . . . I didn’t have enough confidence in myself at that stage to push and scream and yell.”

It’s one of the enduring ironies of the history of philanthropy that Henry Ford—the famously antisemitic automobile tycoon, who hated labor unions, funded square dancing in schools to combat what he saw as the decadent Jewish the cultural influences of jazz, and once received the highest award Nazi Germany could bestow on a foreigner—left his fortune to a foundation that funded civil rights, desegregation, and AIDS research. Certainly, no one would have anticipated it when Henry Ford’s son, Edsel Ford, started the Ford Foundation with a gift of $25,000. In the early years, the Foundation gave primarily to causes in the vicinity of its home city of Detroit, Michigan. Then Edsel and Henry Ford died in the late 1940s, leaving the Ford Foundation a large portion of Ford Motor Company’s non-voting stock. The gift was motivated by pragmatism, as much as altruism. If Henry Ford had willed his grandchildren the full amount of his fortune, they would have owed over $300 million in taxes—enough that they would have been forced to sell so much Ford stock that the family would have lost control of the company to the public. Instead, the money went to the foundation, which was instructed to pay the estate taxes, the family kept control of Ford Motor Company’s stock, and Henry Ford II became president of a foundation he would come to despise.

In its early years, the Ford Foundation focused on establishing a public broadcasting network (with Sesame Street as its single most successful funded project), and funding free speech and the arts. Among others, the Foundation supported James Baldwin, e.e. cummings, and Saul Bellow (but not Maya Angelou – she was rejected with a terse note telling her she lacked sufficient talent for Ford.)

The foundation grew ever more radical as time went on, funding civil rights activism, school desegregation, and organizations fighting the AIDS epidemic. (And, somewhat incongruously, early research on In vitro fertilization.) Henry Ford II’s relationship with the foundation deteriorated until he resigned in 1977. The Ford Foundation has been functionally separate from the Ford family ever since.

Today, the Ford Foundation focuses on challenging inequality, which it attributes to five underlying factors: entrenched cultural narratives, failure to invest in and protect vital public goods, unfair rules of the economy, unequal access to government, and persistent prejudice and discrimination.

The foundation offers a postdoctoral fellowship designed “to increase the diversity of the nation’s college and university faculties by increasing their ethnic and racial diversity, maximize the educational benefits of diversity, and increase the number of professors who can and will use diversity as a resource for enriching the education of all students.” Funding: $50,000 Deadline: December 10, 2020.

Fellowships are Ford’s only funding reserved for higher education, but if you have another project you’re working on—say, an opera—you should check out some of their other funding areas.

Creativity and Free Expression: “Our work explores how cultural narratives affect and shape our reality, and how the arts, journalism, and film can contribute to fairer and more just societies.”

Gender, Racial, and Ethnic Justice: “Our work is to support the courageous people and organizations at the center of this fight to achieve lasting political and social change.”

Sage Advice

Hidden Costs When Writing Your First Budget

If you're lucky, at some point in graduate school, you had a wise and learned mentor introduce you into the arcana of budget writing. But if your adviser didn't happen to be Gandalf the Grant Seeker, you might be facing your first budget with a fair amount of confusion and trepidation. We're here to help!

You can always meet with us and we'll walk you through the process, but if that's not an option, we've collected a list of expenses that people commonly forget to include the first time they write a budget.

Fringe for you. You might be tempted to start your budget by dividing your salary by the amount of months/weeks/hours you plan on working on your proposed project and call it a day. But your salary isn't your total compensation; you also receive health insurance, sick leave, vacation time, retirement benefits, and so on. We call that bundle of benefits fringe. A funder needs to buy out your time based on your total compensation—salary AND fringe.

So how do you figure out the cost of fringe? Ask us! It's a set percentage for all full-time faculty and staff, and a different set-percentage for part-time staff. I don't want to give the exact number here, because I don't want misleading information on our website in case the numbers change at a later date.

Fringe for your students. Here is where things get persnickety: Your undergraduate students also need fringe, but only if they are working for you during summer months. If they are working for you during the academic year, you don't need to set aside fringe for them. Student fringe is a much lower rate than faculty fringe because students aren't full-time employees, with all the benefits that entails. We can give you that number too.

Summer salary. So we all know that a 2020 month is actually 780 million years, but did you know that a summer salary month is also not a normal calendar month? It's true; if you are faculty, you are on a nine-month contract, which means that one calendar month of your time is actually worth... $1/9^{\text{th}}$  of your salary. So if you want to charge two months of summer salary to your grant, don't put down  $2/12^{\text{th}}$  of your salary + fringe (or  $1/6^{\text{th}}$  for those of you who passed elementary school math), put down  $2/9^{\text{th}}$  + fringe.

Summer salary: Part II. There are three (calendar) months of summer. You're only supposed to charge grants for the time you work on a project, so we usually recommend charging slightly less than the full three months to account for vacation, that book review you've been meaning to finish for six years, new applications, and so on.

Indirect Costs. I did a whole issue on cost share and indirect costs. Suffice to say, indirect costs go to the College to underwrite expenses that indirectly support your research. Think of the electricity to keep the lab running, not the beakers you'll use during your experiments. Barnard has a negotiated rate for federal grants that we can give you; other funders often have their own policies.

Assessment costs. Lots of grants require you to devote some portion of your budget to evaluating the success of your project. The rule of thumb is to set aside 5-10% for assessment costs, but your situation may vary.

Publication costs. This won't be relevant to everyone, but if you're in a field where you are expected to pay publication or dissemination costs, don't forget to factor that in! You will certainly be the best judge of those norms in your field.

If you're still not sure about something, send us an email. We're here to help!

NIH Releases New Policy for Data Management and Sharing

Posted on October 29, 2020 by Mike Lauer

“Today, nearly twenty years after the publication of the Final NIH Statement on Sharing Research Data in 2003, we have released a Final NIH Policy for Data Management and Sharing. This represents the agency’s continued commitment to share and make broadly available the results of publicly funded biomedical research. We hope it will be a critical step in moving towards a culture change, in which data management and sharing is seen as integral to the conduct of research. Responsible data management and sharing is good for science; it maximizes availability of data to the best and brightest minds, underlies reproducibility, honors the participation of human participants by ensuring their data is both protected and fully utilized, and provides an element of transparency to ensure public trust and accountability.”

Delete offensive language? Change recommendations? Some editors say it’s OK to alter peer reviews

From Science by Cathleen O’Grady. Posted on October 28, 2020

“Published as a preprint earlier this year at the Open Science Framework and now under review at eLife, the survey reports that 91% of the respondents identified at least one situation in which they would edit a report. More than 80% said they would do so if a reviewer used offensive language or made inappropriate personal comments about the authors. But 8% said they would change the reviewer’s overall recommendation—even without their permission, a finding that shocked Hoekstra. He believes that’s probably an underestimate, given the stigma of admitting to such dubious behavior in a survey. “I think there are probably even more who actually do it.” <<more>>

More people are getting COVID-19 twice, suggesting immunity wanes quickly in some

From Science, by NPR Jop de Vrieze. Posted November 18, 2020.

“Reinfections hint that immunity against COVID-19 may be fragile and wane relatively quickly, with implications not just for the risks facing recovered patients, but also for how long future vaccines might protect people. “The question everybody wants to answer is: Is that second one going to be less severe most of the time or not?” says Derek Cummings, who studies infectious disease dynamics at the University of Florida. “And what do reinfections teach us about SARS-CoV-2 immunity in general?” <<more>>

From Science, by Kelsey Brugger. Posted on November 10, 2020

“Analysts and observers expect the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to speed up long-term priorities that could fundamentally change how future regulations are drafted, including a plan to restrict the use of scientific research. Another action would impose cost-benefit forecasting requirements for new air rules.

Last week, EPA sent a proposal to the White House Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs (OIRA) that would keep air quality standards for fine particulate matter in place through 2025. That action will likely be finalized by 20 January.”

Postdoc survey reveals disenchantment with working life

From Nature, by Chris Wolston. Posted on November 18, 2020

“Uneasy and insecure, postdoctoral researchers worldwide are experiencing great distress around their career prospects, workload and workplace culture, among other issues, finds Nature’s first-ever survey of postdocs.

The survey, which drew self-selecting responses from 7,670 postdoctoral researchers representing 93 nations, sought to capture the major concerns facing these scientists. Respondents’ chief issues are not new. For at least 20 years, postdocs have been identified by the US National Academies, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and others as part of the research precariat — those who work in positions with little job security, poor compensation and an unclear path to a permanent post.” <<more>>
