Grant Opportunities & News You Can Use

Hello faculty,

Summer is here and so are new funding opportunities! We hope the warm weather has brought a chance to recharge and explore new ideas. This month’s newsletter is packed with exciting news and resources to fuel those ideas and any developing research endeavors.

Our team recently attended the Annual Conference for Corporate and Foundation Relations Officers and discovered both new opportunities at foundations and blooming trends in philanthropy. One of the foundations we learned more about is the Longevity Science Foundation, which we highlight as this month’s Featured Funder. For our Sage Advice column, we explore intermediaries and their increasing influence to match high-wealth individuals with passionate grantseeking organizations. Our History of Philanthropy continues to tell the story of John D. Rockefeller and what may have just been the first program officer!

We have news stories and brief thumbnails of opportunities coming due in July. And in the back, we have six months’ worth of deadlines. (As always, check the website! Some of the later deadlines have not yet been released.) While there are no remaining dates for Faculty Research Grants managed by the Provost’s Office for the 2023-2024, anticipated internal grant deadlines for the 2024-2025 academic year will be posted in the coming months.

As always, we will be hosting office hours where you can drop by on Friday, June 7th, any time from 10am-11am to pitch a project, get advice on funding, or just say hi. You can find us here:

Featured Funder: The Longevity Science Foundation - A New Player with a Bold Vision

This month's featured funder is the Longevity Science Foundation (LSF), a relatively new player in the philanthropy field, yet bold in their mission to extend healthy human lifespan. Established in 2021 and headquartered in Miami, Florida, the LSF is making waves with their innovative approach to funding medicine and interdisciplinary longevity research. Their motto, "adding years to our life and life to our years," reflects their commitment to promoting healthy aging and extending quality of life.

Currently, The LSF is particularly interested in funding under-explored areas like psychedelic research for mental health and its promising impacts for PTSD treatment in veterans, but has a host of other priorities. The LSF has an ongoing interest in funding research that aligns with the following focuses:

⇒ Therapeutics: medicine for the prevention of diseases and injuries

⇒ Predictive diagnostics: data-informed patient outcome statistics that help develop prevention approaches

⇒ Personalized medicine: genetic-informed approach to the prevention of cancer treatment, heart disease risk, nutrition, and drug development

⇒ Artificial Intelligence (AI): AI's potential to improve diagnosis timelines such as early detection of age-related diseases, faster drug discovery and more

While the LSF recognizes the importance of continuous improvement as it relates to research on aging and lifespan, the Foundation has also committed to the growth of its grantmaking process and has been receptive to feedback within the philanthropic community. While they launched with an initial funding call in 2021, they received feedback that the application process, primarily a Google form, lacked structure and clarity for researchers. The LSF openly acknowledges this as a learning experience and has since evaluated their grantmaking process. After hiring a dedicated grants management team and established clear guidelines and expectations for applicants. This commitment to transparency aligns with President and CEO Lisa Ireland's core belief that longevity research should benefit everyone, not just the privileged few.

The LSF’s commitment to transparency, accessibility, and collaboration positions them as a key player in the field of longevity research, a growing field we believe is here for the long game. While there are no current open calls, The LSF intends to reopen its rolling application for research that aligns with its priorities later this year. If you think your research is a good fit and would like to prepare early, the structure and requirements of the initial stage of their rolling applications is already outlined on their webpage here.
Sage Advice: The Rise of Intermediaries in Grantmaking

As an avid watcher of all things dating shows from Indian Matchmaking to Married at First Sight, I’ll admit that matchmaking in the world of grantmaking was not on my radar. While love may be blind, philanthropists are seeing more pathways to giving than ever before. The shifting philanthropic landscape is being shaped by the growing importance of intermediaries, or organizations that connect donors with high-impact initiatives, acting as a matchmake for philanthropy.

According to Forbes’ (2024) most recent billionaires list released this year, there are more billionaires than ever and they’re richer than ever. The top 20 on the list increased their net worth by over 700 billion in just a year, with the United States hosting the most billionaires at 813. Whether new or old money, these billionaires are diversifying the way they approach philanthropy and many are using teams of experts to streamline their giving to vetted and de-risked organizations. New donors, particularly those with significant wealth, often lack the expertise or time to thoroughly research potential recipients and turn to intermediaries for guidance and to execute their vision. Intermediaries vet a large pool of organizations and identify those with the most promising solutions to pressing problems, which leads to a curated selection of community-led and non-profit organizations for philanthropists to partner with. Intermediaries also assess the credibility and effectiveness of these organizations, which helps donors feel more confident their money will be used wisely and in impactful ways towards their goals.

While namesake foundations are nowhere near leaving the philanthropic community, it is still important to be aware of the varying ways donors are engaging with organizations to identify and find solutions to problems through grantmaking. A model for intermediaries that is shaping how we can all think about the value of intermediaries is Lever for Change. Lever for Change focuses on large, impactful donations and is most well-known for facilitating MacKenzie Scott’s Yield Giving’s most recent open call for organizations working with community-led organizations in places experiencing the greatest need in the United States. Lever for Change’s work with Yield Giving led to 361 organizations receiving $640 million through this singular grant call earlier this year.

Through their open call process, Lever for Change issues calls for proposals on specific themes, like climate change or global health. Each proposal undergoes a rigorous review by experts and potential beneficiaries themselves, de-risking the financial commitment for donors. What is most unique about Lever for Change’s work with organizations seeking funding is that organizations that advanced to the vetting stage but may not have received funding during the open call process are added to a network that highlights an organization for up to two years. This often results in the matchmaking of vetted organizations with other donors in the Lever for Change network.

While there are no current open calls through Lever for Change, we wanted to highlight how being aware of intermediaries can help organizations and project leads position themselves to tap into this growing pool of philanthropic resources. As a philanthropic cupid of sorts, intermediaries not only connect passionate donors with impactful projects, but help organizations gain access to vital funding to make a real difference in the world.
History of Philanthropy: John D. Rockefeller Part III

In his early years, though, his charitable donations were given based on who caught his eye. Fellow churchgoers who looked like they had fallen on hard times might get a handshake from Rockefeller with an envelope filled with cash. When traveling, he would attend services at Black churches and leave substantial donations behind (though how much is not so clear). He purchased freedom for an enslaved woman whose husband lived in Cincinnati, funded a homeless shelter on Bowery Street in NYC, and a Swedish Mission in Illinois. It must have been a great relief for the famously disciplined Rockefeller to have this one aspect of his life where he felt free to be fully spontaneous, but it also meant, predictably, that he was soon overwhelmed with requests.

Enter Frederick Taylor Gates. Gates didn’t come from a particularly wealthy family or have some remarkable intellectual pedigree; his father was a minister and Gates went to the University of Rochester at the thoroughly normal age of twenty. His early career as a Baptist minister wasn’t particularly spectacular, either. All told, he only had his own congregation for four years, from 1884-1888. By all accounts, though, Gates was an extremely able fundraiser and administrator—and that was exactly what Rockefeller needed.

Gates met Rockefeller while fundraising to start a Baptist university in the Midwest. He must have made quite an impression—another acquaintance once said that Gates had “a voice that thundered out of Sinai” (Chernow, 361)—because Rockefeller not only became the key donor for what would become the University of Chicago, he also hired Gates to manage his philanthropic affairs. It was an unexpectedly lucky move. Gates had total faith in Rockefeller and no faith in anyone else, which made him at once extremely loyal and extremely able at detecting scammers, of which there were plenty. One day, almost on a whim, Rockefeller asked Gates to look into an iron mine that he was invested in. Gates poked around, talked to locals, and came back with blunt, bad news: the whole operation was a fraud. There was no mine, it was just a rumor being planted to drive up real estate prices among gullible investors who thought the area would soon be booming. Embarrassed, Rockefeller tried to brush off the investment as a blip, but he soon became curious and sent Gates to investigate another investment. Again, the same bad news: another fraud, this time worth $600,000 (Chernow, 368).

Rockefeller, it turned out, kept an extremely close eye on everything related to Standard Oil but was remarkably lax when it came to his other investments. He soon opened up his books to Gates and let Gates do a deep dive. Gates discovered that Rockefeller was being scammed on all sides, largely by acquaintances he knew from church. And that’s how an ex-Baptist minister became the head of a committee overseeing Rockefeller’s personal investments and a dozen failed companies that Rockefeller couldn’t figure out how to unload, in addition to his philanthropic efforts. Rockefeller later called Gates the greatest businessman he had ever met (370). Gates, in turn, was unwaveringly loyal to Rockefeller, once retorting to a critic who complained that all Rockefeller cared about during his Cleveland years was money, “In heaven’s name, what else could he do in that city?!” (364).

Gates soon convinced Rockefeller that his old way of giving whenever the spirit moved him was ineffective and made him a target for scammers. If Rockefeller really wanted to make a difference, he should stop giving to community organizations and establish his own organizations that he could oversee. Rockefeller agreed. The first major initiative was the Rockefeller Institute of Medical Research, inspired, in part, by Gates’s distrust of the American medical profession after his first wife dropped dead of an internal hemorrhage a year after their marriage. Under his management, Rockefeller also helped found the General Education Board, created a campaign to eradicate hookworm, and crucially, launched the Rockefeller Foundation.

Grant Opportunities

GENERAL INTERESTS AND CROSS-DISCIPLINARY

Leakey Foundation Research Grant
Deadline: July 15
“The Leakey Foundation exclusively funds research related to human origins. Priority of funding is commonly given to exploratory phases of promising new research projects that meet the stated purpose of the Foundation. The majority of The Leakey Foundation’s Research Grants awarded to doctoral students are in the $3,000-$15,000 range with a funding limit of $20,000. Larger grants given to senior scientists and post-doctoral researchers may be funded up to $30,000.”

Gladstone’s Library Wales Residential Scholarships
Deadline: July 31
Various scholarships for different disciplines to access the Gladstone Library.

Shafik Gabr Foundation Fellowship
Deadline: TBA, applications now open!

“The East-West: The Art of Dialogue initiative organises an annual exchange program, the Gabr Fellowship, for young emerging leaders from the East and the West to join forces to develop and implement projects addressing critical issues in their countries.”

ARTS AND HUMANITIES

Columbia University Heyman Center Edward Said Fellowship
Deadline: July 15
“Named in his honor, Edward W. Said Research Study Awards of $5,000 are intended to offset the financial costs of consulting the Edward W. Said Papers in the Rare Book and Manuscript Library at Columbia University. Researchers early in their careers whose scholarship speaks across disciplinary boundaries, promotes humanistic inquiry in the service of intercultural communication and understanding, and addresses pressing global issues in the public sphere are especially encouraged to apply.”

Ucross Foundation Residency Program
Deadline: July 15
“Ucross is dedicated to fostering the creative spirit of working artists by providing uninterrupted time, studio space, living accommodations, and the experience of the majestic High Plains, while serving as a responsible steward of our historic 20,000-acre ranch in northern Wyoming.”

emerging scholars, both academics and independent scholars. The selected scholar will receive $25,000 to fund their research at the Library. They will be expected to utilize the LGBTQ collections at NYPL, though it is not expected they confine themselves to those collections.”

EDUCATION

William T. Grant Foundation Scholars Program
Deadline: July 3
“The William T. Grant Scholars Program supports career development for promising early-career researchers. The program funds five-year research and mentoring plans that significantly expand researchers’ expertise in new disciplines, methods, and content areas.”

National Science Foundation
Improving Undergraduate STEM Education: Education and Human Resources
Deadline: July 17
“Supports projects to improve STEM teaching and learning for undergraduate students, including studying what works and for whom and how to transform institutions to adopt successful practices in STEM education.”

SOCIAL SCIENCES

National Science Foundation
Linguistics
Deadline: July 15
“Supports research on human language — encompassing investigations of the properties of individual human languages and natural language in general — and the intersections of linguistics with cognition, society and other areas of science.”

National Science Foundation
Social Psychology
Deadline: July 15
“Supports research and infrastructure to advance knowledge of human social behavior, including neural and physiological patterns; thought and emotion processes; and intentions, actions and habits that explain ways of thinking about and relating to others.”

Russell Sage Foundation
Future of Work
Deadline: July 24
“The Russell Sage Foundation’s program on the Future of Work supports innovative research on the causes and consequences of changes in the quality of jobs for low- and moderately paid workers and their families in the U.S. We seek investigator-initiated research proposals that will broaden our understanding of the role of changes in employer practices, the nature of the labor market and public policies on employment, earnings, and job quality. We are especially interested in proposals that address questions about the interplay of market and non-market forces in shaping the wellbeing of workers.”

Russell Sage Foundation
Race, Ethnicity, and Immigration
Deadline: July 24
“The Russell Sage Foundation’s program on Race, Ethnicity, and Immigration supports innovative investigator-initiated research that examines the roles of race, ethnicity, nativity, legal status—and their interactions with each other and other social categories—in the social, economic, and political outcomes for immigrants, U.S.-born racial and ethnic minorities, and native-born whites.”

Russell Sage Foundation
Immigration and Immigrant Integration
Deadline: July 24
